The Texas Program that Backs School Bond Debt Hits Limit

A state-backed program that for decades has helped school districts get the lowest interest rates possible on bonds and keep their credit scores high has reached its debt limit — and it could cost taxpayers millions of dollars.

Texas' Permanent School Fund promises lenders who buy bonds from a school district that the state will pay them back if the district can't. But it can only vouch for so much debt.

The IRS, which has jurisdiction over tax-exempt municipal bonds, has set that limit at about $117 billion — and it was reached in December. Since then, at least 49 school and charter districts that asked the PSF to back their debt were denied due to insufficient capacity, resulting in more than $6.87 billion in unguaranteed bonds.

The program previously reached its debt limit in 2009 as the state's growing population and student enrollment led schools to issue more bonds for renewing decades-old buildings and erecting new ones. The IRS updated the program's debt limit later that year, but not before school districts were forced to pay higher interest rates on their bond debt for a couple of months.

Perez said the Texas Education Agency and PSF have been working with members of Congress to increase the debt limit either through legislation or through an IRS action.

U.S. Reps. Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin, and Jodey C. Arrington, R-Lubbock, filed House Resolution 32, which would eliminate a limit on the bond program.

"Without a corrective course, we're currently barreling toward sinking hundreds of millions of education dollars into needlessly high financing costs," Doggett said.

But while Congress determines the fate of the bill, Texas school officials will have to decide whether to delay their bonds or continue their projects at higher interest rates — potentially having to raise property taxes.

Sports

Lady Badger Soccer

Your Lady Badger JV lost to Gatesville last night 2-0. We take on China Spring away next Tuesday. JV @ 4:00, Varsity @ 5:30.

Badger Tennis

The varsity tennis team traveled to Georgetown yesterday for a 25 team tournament. The tournament was broken down into divisions based on UTR points. So each group was about the same level of player.

Luke Rogers 1st - his last two matches were tough, but he held it together to pull them out. He was serving and volleying more than ever and doing great at the net.

Amore Zapata 4th place - Amore almost came back in the semi's but had some scoring issues.

Champion / Venegas lost their first one, won the next, played in the finals of consolation but fell 6-8. James Vasquez 1-2. Ashfield / Ecker 0-2. Shaw / Valdez 1-1. Sierra Vincent 1-2

We go to China Springs on Thursday. Hoping for some warmer weather on a tennis day.
