Voting in Texas

Texans are heading to the polls today for the 2022 primary, and voters will choose party nominees for statewide seats, including governor, and district-based congressional and legislative seats. Historically, voter participation in midterm primary elections is dismal in Texas, with less than a quarter of registered voters casting ballots most years.

Locally, Lampasas County has primaries for local candidates. Some do not have opponents, but the County Clerk primary has contenders Dianne Miller, Dee Ann Crawford, and Tasha Bates. The race for Justice of the Peace precinct one also has 3 contenders, Misty Wakeman, Dr. James Mercer and Chris Munn. State representative for district 68 has 4 contenders in the primary, Craig Carter, Gary Franklin, David Spiller and Mark Middleton. On the democratic ballot, other than the state races, District 24 State Senator has 2 in the race with Jeremy Kohlwes and Kathy Jones-Hospod.

You can vote today from 7am to 7pm at the following locations:
