Texas Primary Election

Around 17% of registered voters in Texas cast a ballot in the 2022 primary, according to preliminary turnout data from the secretary of state. As of Wednesday evening, 434 of Harris County's nearly 1,200 precincts had not reported their votes to the state. These turnout numbers also do not include the thousands of mail ballots that have been flagged for possible rejection because they don't comply with a new voting law. Voters have until six days after the election to correct their ballot. During the 2020 primary, mail-in ballots comprised 10% of the early vote.

Voters chose party nominees for statewide seats, including governor, and district-based congressional and legislative seats. Early voting was from Feb. 14 to Feb. 25, and election day was March 1. Nearly 55% voted early and 45% voted on election day. Historically, voter participation in midterm primary elections is dismal in Texas, with less than a quarter of registered voters casting ballots most years. This means that a majority of registered voters don't participate. These figures also do not account for the eligible voters in the state that have not registered.

"Turnout in the state for primary elections remains perpetually low. But this is true regardless of election year," said Joshua Blank, the research director of the Texas Politics Project. "It's not representative or indicative of what's going to happen in the coming election cycle."

Primary voters tend to be more engaged in politics compared with the rest of the electorate, whether that involves news consumption or engagement with civic organizations, according to Blank.

criticized TikTok, citing practices and computer-driven promotion of content they say can endanger the physical and mental health of young users. The platform has an estimated 1 billion monthly users and is especially popular with teens and younger children. Last month, Texas opened an investigation into TikTok's alleged violations of children's privacy and facilitation of human trafficking. "Our children are growing up in the age of social media — and many feel like they need to measure up to the filtered versions of reality that they see on their screens," California Attorney General Rob Bonta said in a news release. "We know this takes a devastating toll on children's mental health and well-being." Bonta said the investigation aims determine if TikTok is violating the law in promoting its platform to young people.
