Income Tax Returns Due Tomorrow

Tomorrow, April 18th is tax day, the federal deadline for filing a 2022 federal income tax return. The website Nerd Wallet also tells us this is the last day to request a six-month tax extension using Form 4868. For last-minute filers, the IRS will consider your paper return on time if it is properly addressed, has enough postage, is postmarked, and is put in the mail by the due date. For e-filers, the agency says the date and time in your time zone when your return is transmitted determine whether it's on time.

If you request a tax extension, your federal tax return will be due Oct. 16, 2023. You must file Form 4868 by tax day (April 18) to be eligible for the extension. Getting a tax extension gives you more time to file, but it does not give you (cont'd on back)

(cont'd from front) more time to pay your taxes. You will still need to estimate your taxes owed and pay the sum by April 18.

So far, refunds are 10% smaller than last year. Two weeks ago, the IRS said that the average tax refund it has paid out as of yet is $2,910 — a 9.8% drop from the $3,226 it measured around the same time in 2022.

The IRS says people who file electronically should expect to get their refund within around 21 days if they choose direct deposit and their return has no issues. People who submit returns on paper are more likely to join the agency's large backlog.
