Politics in Texas

(Texas Tribune) Politicians have gotten so good at drawing political maps that they're spoiling democracy. Few of the races for the Texas Legislature and the state's congressional delegation are competitive in November; districts are drawn for either Republicans or Democrats to win, with few designed to promote competition between the parties. The real choices, such as they are, are left to the sliver of voters who decide in primary elections what candidates their parties will send on to the easy wins in November. A lot of the 2022 elections for Congress and the Legislature are already behind us.

The effect? Rather than casting a wide net to attract voters, politically polarized legislative bodies produce polarized maps that appeal to small groups of partisans who vote in primary elections, like the ones in March that drew less than 1 in 5 registered voters this year. More numerous general election voters are left with uncompetitive November choices in districts drawn for one party or another, but not both.

The average Republican candidate in that 2020 election did better than Trump, winning by 9.1 percentage points. In the new House map, House District 112, where state Rep. Angie Chen Button, R-Richardson, is the incumbent, those candidates won by 7.9 percentage points — better than Trump's performance. That's the most competitive Republican district on the House map, but based on recent history, Democrat Elva Curl will have a hard time taking it away.

On the other side, four of the most competitive Democratic districts went to statewide candidates by fewer than 5 percentage points in 2020. After next month's primary runoffs produce the party nominees, three of those will be among the few truly contested legislative races in November: HD-118 in San Antonio, HD-70 in Collin County and HD-37 in Harlingen. The fourth race, in South Texas' House District 80, is all but over: Rep. Tracy King, D-Batesville, doesn't have a Republican opponent in November. (Cont'd on back)

The Blotter

Lampasas Police Dept. blotter for Tuesday shows an early morning report of a prowler in the 1000 block of McLean St. at 12:27am. The afternoon shows a reported assault in the 900 block of S. Broad St. at 2:01pm, a theft reported in the 500 block of N. Spring St. at 4:19pm and a suspicious vehicle was reported in the 600 block of S. Ridge at 4:21pm. There was a disorderly conduct in the 1000 block of W. Ave E at 8:28pm, there was a shots fired call in the 200 block of Riverview Dr. at 9:19pm and suspicious activity was reported in the 300 block of E. 7th St. at 11:58pm.

The Lampasas County Sheriff's Blotter for Tuesday shows Lometa with a reported threats call. In Kempner Officers dealt with medical calls, a missing person was reported, a suicidal person, a fish & game call, a request for extra patrol and a warrant was served. Out in the county there were medical calls, livestock issues, reports of suspicious activity, civil matters and a reported fraud. Deputies went into Cove on an alarm call and a medical call.

The Jail Log shows the arrest of 23 year old Tristan Alesick of Kempner on an out-of-county charge. Also arrested was 36 year old Kevin Havins of Lampasas on probation violations, and Tyler Norman was also arrested on a probation violation.

The Burn Ban is still in effect

(from the front) The Texas Senate districts are even less competitive. Of the 19 districts drawn for Republican advantage, Trump's smallest margin of victory — 13.1 percentage points — was in SD-9, where incumbent Sen. Kelly Hancock, R-North Richland Hills, will face Democrat Gwenn Burud in November. Trump's win was a low-water mark in that district: The average Republican candidate in a statewide race won by 18.2 percentage points there. It's hard country for Democrats.

The Democratic Texas Senate districts are only a little more competitive. Republicans drew a dozen seats it would be hard for their own candidates to win — giving some ground to Democrats but also locking in the GOP's majority grip on the Senate. Only one Democrat, Sen. Beverly Powell of Fort Worth, was fenced into a Republican district. She won her primary but then dropped out of the race, saying there is no way for a Democrat to win it: Trump won there by 15.8 percentage points, and statewide Republican candidates, on average, won by 19.2 percentage points in 2020. As unhappy as Democrats were about her decision, she's probably right about the district.

Congressional maps in Texas are similarly noncompetitive. Two dozen of the 38 districts are safely Republican, 11 are safely Democratic and one is truly competitive — at least on paper.

The last — CD-28, where Rep. Henry Cuellar of Laredo is in a primary runoff with Jessica Cisneros, also of Laredo — is a wildcard. It's a Democratic district, where Trump lost to Biden by 7 percentage points and the average Republican statewide candidate lost by 9.5 percentage points in 2020. But Cisneros came within 4 percentage points of beating Cuellar two years ago, and the FBI raided his home and office just before the primaries this year.

News like that can overwhelm a district's partisan history, and Cuellar is in a race even though his district looks safe for Democrats. You'll probably hear a lot about it; the way lawmakers drew these maps, all but a handful of races are uninteresting or noncompetitive or both.

They made the choices that used to be left to voters.
