Out in the county there were medical calls, a reported disturbance, and a structure fire. The Fire Marshall tells Lampasas Radio that the homeowner had the fire almost extinguished when the fire department arrived. Texas reports largest single-day increase in coronavirus cases

The Texas Tribune tells us that the state recorded a total of 2,504 new cases Wednesday, hitting a new high, according to data released Wednesday by the Texas Department of State Health Services. That topped the previous daily high of 1,949 cases May 31.

Just over 21% of the new cases were reported in Jefferson County, which reported 537 new cases Tuesday, nearly doubling its previous total.

Asked about the cause of the increase, DSHS spokesperson Chris Van Deusen pointed to Jefferson County's three state prison units.

Most of the new cases were "due to a change in how the local health department is reporting" cases from the prisons, he said. Hot spots like prisons have recently started to do mass testing, and the data is not always reported daily.

One county, Pecos, had a reporting glitch in its data Tuesday that made it appear to gain 92 cases between Tuesday and Wednesday, he said. The glitch "underscores the provisional nature of this data," Van Deusen said.

Gov. Greg Abbott ended a statewide stay-at-home order a little more than a month ago and set the stage for a phased reopening of businesses.

Several of the state's urban counties also recorded triple-digit increases in new cases Tuesday: Harris County recorded 320 new cases, Dallas County had 298, Bexar County had 180, and Travis County had 161.

Happy Birthday

River B. Ware-19

The statewide total was 863 cases above the seven-day average, a measure used to account for daily swings. For the third day in a row, Texas also reported the highest number of hospitalizations Wednesday, with 2,153 Texans being treated for COVID-19 in hospitals." While hot spots may have high numbers of positive cases, the number of cases in Texas in other areas, rural and urban, is concerning, especially as we go through phase III of the reopening plan.
