The Agenda includes: Community input, consideration of the 2022-2023 Student Code of Conduct, consideration of bids for insurance, materials, and labor, consideration of bids for insurance, naming a representative for the National School Lunch Program, and a presentation of the proposed 2022-2023 Budget and Tax Rate. There will also be administrative and personnel reports.

Wind Energy

The state's High Plains region, which covers 41 counties in the Texas Panhandle and West Texas, is home to more than 11,000 wind turbines — the most in any area of the state.

But a significant portion of the electricity produced in the High Plains stays there for a simple reason: It can't be moved elsewhere. Despite the growing development of wind energy production in Texas, the state's transmission network would need significant infrastructure upgrades to ship out the energy produced in the region.

And when the rest of the state is asked to conserve energy to help stabilize the grid, the High Plains has to turn off turbines to limit wind production it doesn't need.

Texans have already had a few energy scares this year amid scorching temperatures and high energy demand to keep homes cool. The Electric Reliability Council of Texas, which operates the state's electrical grid, warned about drops in energy production twice last month and asked people across the state to lower their consumption to avoid an electricity emergency.

The energy supply issues have hit Texans' wallets as well. Nearly half of Texas' electricity is generated at power plants that run on the state's most dominant energy source, natural gas, and its price has increased more than 200% since late February, causing elevated home utility bills.

A 2021 ERCOT report shows there have been increases in stability constraints for wind energy in recent years in both West and South Texas that have limited the long-distance transfer of power. "The transmission constraints are such that energy can't make it to the load centers.

Hensley said this is where battery storage stations can help. According to the U.S. Energy Information Administration, utility-scale batteries tripled in capacity in 2021 and can now store up to 4.6 gigawatts of energy. Texas has been quickly developing storage projects. In 2011, Texas had only 5 megawatts of battery storage capacity; by 2020, that had ballooned to 323.1 megawatts. "Storage is the real game-changer because it can really help to mediate and control a lot of the intermittency issues that a lot of folks worry about when they think about wind and solar technology," Hensley said. Storage technology can help, but Hensley said transmission is still the big factor to consider.
