A Commissioners Court Meeting was held on Monday for discussion of the National 4H Week, EMS resources, and lot vacancies, among other agenda items. A motion was passed to hold an auction for the vacant county jail lot on October 27, at 9am. Commissioner Lewis Bridges will run the sale due to the vacant lot being in Bridges' precinct. The minimum bid will be $125,000. Commissioner Bobby Carroll expressed concerns that the potential buyer will "sit on" the vacant lot and suggested restrictions to prevent that. The Household Hazardous Waste Event will be held on March 18, 2023 and aims to eliminate dumping along country roads. Similar to previous years, the county is aiming to spend under $12,000 on the event. Funding for EMS equipment and resources with the help of the Hamilton EMS was approved. Additionally, National 4H Week received an official proclamation. National 4H Week aims to give children opportunities and assists them in educational programs, agricultural programs, wildlife protection, etc.

Water Trades

As Texas faces an increasingly fraught environmental future from climate change, a new approach to conservation is growing.

Drought conditions have created a two-pronged problem for Texas aquifers, natural bodies of water that move through porous rock underneath the Earth's surface, and reservoirs. Without rainfall, farmers and ranchers are relying more on those well-established water supplies in the state. And without that same rainfall, the aquifer and reservoir levels can't be replenished as quickly as they are being depleted.

As the state is losing water, some conservation organizations, mostly nonprofits, and agencies are stepping up to help conserve water by using a new strategy — paying farmers to leave the water in the ground and consume more sustainably.

Known as water trades, the transactions help keep water in nature and prop up the state's agricultural economy. Experts believe this could become a major conservation strategy for the drought-prone state, given the state's preference for solutions that boost markets, over regulation.

"The tool the Legislature has been pointing toward for several decades now has been basically allowing water trades," said Sharlene Leurig, CEO of Texas Water Trade. "That's water to be purchased or leased in a way that makes that water available for the environment."

Texas is in the early stages of establishing these water transactions between organizations and farmers. The programs are voluntary. Some encourage more efficient irrigation on farms while others pay farmers to not use water for irrigation during times of drought.

Getting reimbursed for using less, or in some cases no water, could be beneficial to farmers with failed crops. The current drought is costing Texas agriculture billions of dollars in losses.
