Fundraising and the Gubernatorial Election

Beto O'Rourke officially caught up to Gov. Greg Abbott in fundraising for the governor's race late last month, erasing Abbott's once-formidable cash-on-hand advantage. New campaign finance reports show O'Rourke ended the latest reporting period, July 1 through Sept. 29, with $16.47 million cash on hand. Abbott had $16.35 million in the bank.

Abbott spent far more than O'Rourke during the period — $53 million to $32 million — and the governor's campaign said his expenses included $30 million in pre-purchased advertising time through Election Day. Still, the development shows how O'Rourke is by far the biggest financial threat Abbott has ever faced.

The newest filings with the Texas Ethics Commission came as polls continue to give Abbott a lead in the mid-single digits. A Marist poll released Wednesday gave Abbott a 4-percentage-point lead, though that was among registered voters. The Marist poll did survey voters who said they will "definitely" vote, and Abbott led among them by 8 points.

But the fundraising reports show O'Rourke cannot be counted out yet. He had over five times more contributions than Abbott had over the summer period, roughly 472,000 to 86,000. The ratio was similar in the previous period.

Abbott's top donors — at $1 million each — were California real-estate developer Ed Roski Jr. and Miriam Adelson, the wife of the late casino mogul and GOP megadonor Sheldon Adelson. O'Rourke's No. 1 donor was cryptocurrency billionaire Sam Bankman-Fried, who gave $1 million. O'Rourke also got $500,000 more from George Soros, the New York-based Democratic megadonor who cut a $1 million check to O'Rourke during the previous period.

Among other notable donors, O'Rourke received $100,000 from Illinois Gov. J.B. Pritzker, whose state Abbott has been busing migrants to. And Abbott got $250,000 more from Dallas pipeline mogul Kelcy Warren, who is suing O'Rourke for defamation over claims he has made about Warren's alleged influence over Abbott after the 2021 power grid collapse.

O'Rourke continued to get more money from outside Texas. On the latest report, 41% of the money he raised was from out of state, as was 51.8% of the number of contributions. Those numbers were 19% and 50.7% for Abbott, respectively.
