Election Scams

An election's approach always seems to turn up the emotional heat across the nation, and the United States 2022 midterm elections are no exception. On Nov. 8, Texas voters will have an opportunity to decide who will lead their local communities and the Lone Star State into the future. As the election nears, voices arguing for or against key issues are loud and persistent, often fueled by emotional appeals and passionate support. While political campaigns often include unsolicited contact as part of a legitimate outreach effort, bad actors also capitalize on peoples' passion to trick them into divulging personal information or providing financial contributions.

It is a common tactic for scammers to prey on emotion and exploit vulnerabilities when people deeply care about an ongoing situation or issue. This can often be seen by the frequency of charity and fundraising scams following a natural or manmade disaster. As generous donors look to contribute to ease the suffering of those affected, scammers seek to exploit their kindness for their own benefit. In the political arena, people often participate in polls and surveys because they want their voices to be heard, and scammers use that desire to build trust and steal personal information. Other citizens who want to be involved often donate to the political campaign of their chosen representative because they believe their donation will go to improving their country or community, and scammers are more than willing to take advantage of their beliefs for their own gain.

Elections, by their very nature, are polarizing. It is easy to get swept up in the emotional wave and take risks that you might otherwise avoid. While it is important for the governed to be informed and engaged with the election process, it is equally as important to remain aware of scammers that use elections to initiate contact and steal from the public.
