A U.S. passport.

If you don't have an approved photo ID, you can still vote by signing a "reasonable impediment" form and presenting valid supporting identification documents, such as a birth certificate, your voter registration certificate or a current utility bill with your name and address.

If you forget your ID, you can cast a provisional ballot, which can be counted only if you provide the required photo ID or documents within six days.

Lampasas ISD School Board Meeting

A School Board meeting was held on Monday evening and the discussion included enrollment rates, district improvement plans, and the Lampasas Middle School campus report.

The enrollment and attendance report shows attendance rates at 94.1%. The District Improvement Plan outlines several strategies for achieving high STAAR testing scores, counseling for 'at risk and required' students, offering more career awareness opportunities, and providing athletic and UIL extracurricular options for students.

The Lampasas Middle School campus report shows that STAAR testing scores are exceeding pre-pandemic scores. The Campus was rated a B by the state. Drug policies were briefly discussed by LHS Principal Joey McQueen such as THC-vape detectors and drug counseling.

Election Day Today

Polls are open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. local time on Election Day. If you registered to vote by Oct. 11 and meet all other requirements, you have a right to cast a ballot as long as you're in line at a polling location by 7 p.m.

In Lampasas County if you are a county resident you can vote at any polling location in the county.

Burn Ban Lifted

Lampasas County Judge Randy Hoyer has lifted the burn ban through Monday, November 14, 2022.

Election Monitors

The U.S. Department of Justice announced Monday it will send election monitors to three Texas counties — Harris, Dallas and Waller — to keep an eye on local compliance with federal voting rights laws on Election Day.

Monitors from the Justice Department are regularly deployed across the country for major elections, with Texas counties making the list for at least the past decade under both Democratic and Republican administrations. The three Texas counties are among 64 jurisdictions in 24 states that will have a federal presence Tuesday.

The announcement of the monitors comes ahead of an Election Day shrouded by increasing concerns over voter intimidation, though there have been few, if any, reports of major concern so far in Texas where nearly 5.5 million voters have already cast their ballots.

The department did not specify how it made its selections for monitoring, though Harris and Waller counties have made the list in the last four presidential and midterm elections. Harris County has recently been the site of electoral catastrophes such as the 2020 presidential primary when voters at a polling place on the Texas Southern University campus — one of the nation's largest historically Black colleges — were left waiting six hours to cast their ballots.

Rural Waller County is home to Prairie View A&M University, a historically Black campus, where generations of students have been caught up in the long struggle for voting rights. The latest chapter of that struggle began in 2018 when a group of students sued the county over a lopsided early voting schedule that offered students — most of them Black — fewer opportunities to vote early than the county's white residents. Following the suit, the county's commissioner court extended hours at an on-campus polling place, though a federal judge ruled years later that the county had not discriminated against the students.

Harris and Dallas are also the state's largest and second-largest counties and home to large populations of Black and Latino voters.

Effects of the Time Change

(KWTX) - As people gained an hour of sleep over the weekend, the push to stay on standard time is gaining momentum.

Daylight Saving Time (DST) came to an end early Sunday morning. "The benefit of that is we gain an extra hour of sleep," said Dr. Carl David Boethel, Pulmonologist at Baylor Scott & White Medical Center - Temple. "The problem is, we lose that hour of sleep in the Spring."

Boethel, who is a sleep specialist, says more morning sunlight helps humans function better...and DST gives less of it.

When you move to Daylight Saving Time, what will occur is, you shift the sleep time to where the patient is having to go to bed earlier, but their biological rhythms are designed to make them stay awake longer," said Boethel. "As a result, people will usually stay awake later, then they have to get up earlier, which leads to sleep deprivation."

And sleep deprivation, studies show, may increase the risk of heart attack, stroke, diabetes, sleep and mental health disorders, and it can even shorten life-expectancies.

"There's some harms with that, there's an increased risk of heart attack that's been very well documented," said Boethel. As a result, Boethel is part of a growing list of doctors against a permanent Daylight Saving Time.

"There is a movement across the country now to sort of stay on one set time: if we were to go to that and just have one set time, it'd be best to stay on standard time," he said.
