Sadly, more candy canes have been stolen from the park at the Lampasas Christmas on the Creek display. Please report any information you may have about this. Decorations & lights are VERY expensive & take many man-hours to install. This is disappointing to our hard working committee & community.

The Lampasas Police Dept. has asked everyone to keep their eyes open, and report anything unusual.

Shooting at Killeen Mall

(KWTX) - Killeen Police officers on Tuesday swarmed the Killeen Mall to respond to an active shooter situation that left one person wounded, led to an evacuation, and later a "shelter in place" order for employees and customers who remained inside the mall.

The status of the suspect late Tuesday was "unknown," according to police. Killeen Police Chief Charles Kimble described the suspect as a "white male" about six feet tall. The suspect was wearing a beanie and a hoodie, Kimble said.

The victim suffered multiple gunshot wounds, but was reportedly in stable condition after being airlifted to a nearby hospital, Kimble said.

The incident at the mall located at located at 2100 S W S Young Drive was reported at 7:17 p.m. Tuesday. Police remained at the scene late Tuesday night to help store employees and other people still sheltering in place inside the mall.

UPDATE 12:20AM

According to the Killeen Police Dept. Facebook page, The Killeen Police Department has finished the on scene investigation and cleared the scene.

Officers have obtained video and are looking for the suspect in these photos. He is a white male and was last seen wearing a white beanie and a white mask, with dark clothing.

Omicron Variant in Texas

Texas has identified its first case of the omicron COVID-19 variant, a strain flagged as potentially more infectious than any that has come before it, including the delta variant responsible for surges still happening across the country, state health officials said on Monday.

The variant was identified in Texas in a northwest Harris County woman in her 40s, according to the Texas Department of State Health Services and county Judge Lina Hidalgo. The woman was fully vaccinated and experienced some of the symptoms commonly associated with COVID-19 but did not require hospitalization, Harris County public health officials said. She had not traveled outside her home area recently, which suggests that she caught the virus within her community.

Houston public health officials on Monday evening said the omicron variant had turned up in a handful of the city's wastewater treatment plants in samples taken right after Thanksgiving. Technicians in Houston and other cities have been routinely testing wastewater for more than a year for COVID-19 and its variants to keep track of several community spread indicators. Because the virus is shed through feces, whether the infected person has been symptomatic or not, health officials use those tests to get an (cont'd on back) idea of which variants are circulating and can see, as with omicron, when a new one shows up.

No cases of the omicron strain had been confirmed in the city limits as of Monday evening.

Many questions still surround omicron, even as it remains high on the radar of state and federal health officials.

While early indicators suggest the variant is very contagious, it's still unknown whether it will infect people at a faster rate than the delta variant, which currently represents nearly all the active cases in Texas. Little is also known about the severity of disease the omicron variant causes.
